US Troops hasty withdrawal might lead to the rule of Warlords in Afghanistan

President Biden's April announcement that all U.S. forces would withdraw by September 11, 2021 afforded U.S. military planners had limited time to prepare for contingencies on how to continue the fight against more than 20 Afghan groups still operating in Afghanistan.

Washington is considering options to ensure its intelligence-gathering and counterterrorism capabilities are maintained. Recent reports suggests that United States is looking to use bases in Pakistan and in the former Soviet Republics in Central Asia — although without success so far.

With the Taliban making rapid advancement in recent months and a host of major attacks perpetrated by other terrorists, ethnic groups across the country are forming militias to protect themselves.

Chinese Uyghur minority's testimony

Members of China's ethnic Uyghur minority have provided moving testimony about their persecution to the Uyghur Tribunal, an unofficial, civil society-led investigation into possible genocide and crimes against humanity committed by Beijing. Although the "people's tribunal" is not backed by any government and its findings will not be binding on any country, the hearings play an important role in providing recognition to victims' suffering and in strengthening the legal argument for a U.N. Commission of Inquiry or other international accountability mechanisms. As such, the tribunal serves as an important tool for civil society to move atrocity prevention efforts forward when U.N. or international court action is blocked.
